

Home

HOME > SOCIAL MEDIA FOR ACADEMICS > TO UNDERSTAND SOCIAL MEDIA FOR ACADEMICS, WE HAVE TO KILL THE IDEA OF SOCIAL MEDIA FOR ACADEMICS

To understand social media for academics, we have to kill the idea of social media for academics

BY MARK CARRIGAN ON MARCH 25, 2017 • \(0 \)

In the 30+ talks I have done about social media in the last year, I have discussed many things. But the one theme that has been most prominent is the extrinsic, rather than intrinsic, complexity of the subject matter. There is nothing inherently challenging about how to use social media. Any practical or technical difficulties are well within the realm of what has become habitual for most within late modernity. What creates the challenge is negotiating the novelty of its enablements and constraints within a particular context.

However it is this novelty which also makes it difficult to exercise our reflexivity in the way we would about any comparable matter. This novelty gives rise to a species of what Jacob Silverman describes as 'internet exceptionalism':

What we call the Internet—and what web writers so lazily draw on for their work—is less a hive mind or a throng or a gathering place and more a personalized set of online maneuvers guided by algorithmic recommendations. When we look at our browser windows, we see our own particular interests, social networks, and purchasing histories scrambled up to stare back at us. But because we haven't found a shared discourse to talk about this complex arrangement of competing influences and relationships, we reach for a term to contain it all. Enter "the Internet."

The Internet is a linguistic trope but also an ideology and even a business plan. If your job is to create content out of (mostly) nothing, then you can always turn to something/someone that "the Internet" is mad or excited about. And you don't have to worry about alienating readers because "the Internet" is so general, so vast and all-encompassing, that it always has room. This form of writing is widely adaptable. Now it's common to see stories where "Facebook" or "Twitter" stands in for the Internet, offering approval or judgment on the latest viral schlock. Choose your (anec)data carefully, and Twitter can tell any story you want.

Much as "the Internet" gives us "a rhetorical life raft to hang onto" when discussing a subject that is vastly overhyped and invested with all manner of hopes and fears, so too does "social media" become a semantic crutch when making sense of the complex changes being brought about by digital communications within a particular institutional sphere. It's similarly "easy, a convenient reference point" through which we gloss a complex set of changes in which technological possibilities are only one causal factor. By exceptionalising social media in this way, we "fail to relate this communication system, and everything that happens through it, to the society around us".

Subscribe to Blog via Email

Enter your email address to subscribe to this blog and receive notifications of new posts by email.

Join 34,405 other subscribers

Archives

August 2017

July 2017

June 2017

May 2017

April 2017

March 2017

February 2017

January 2017

December 2016

November 2016

October 2016

September 2016

August 2016

July 2016

June 2016

May 2016

April 2016

March 2016

February 2016

January 2016

December 2015

November 2015

October 2015

This tendency seems even more pronounced when we talk about something as specific as the academy. The more we talk about “social media” as something which all academics should (or shouldn’t do) the more we obscure the changes it entails for academic labour and the organisations which academics work within. My ambition as someone who has written a book called Social Media for Academics? To get academics to stop talking about social media.

Share
this:

« Pierre Bourdieu, liberal thought and the ontology of collectives Beautiful new words to describe obscure emotions »

Categories: Social Media for Academics

Tags: social media , social media for academics

Leave a Reply

September 2015

August 2015

July 2015

June 2015

May 2015

April 2015

March 2015

February 2015

January 2015

December 2014

November 2014

October 2014

September 2014

August 2014

July 2014

June 2014

May 2014

April 2014

March 2014

February 2014

January 2014

December 2013

November 2013

October 2013

September 2013

August 2013

July 2013

June 2013

May 2013

April 2013

March 2013

February 2013

January 2013

December 2012

November 2012

October 2012

September 2012

August 2012

July 2012

June 2012

May 2012

April 2012

March 2012

February 2012

January 2012

December 2011

November 2011

October 2011

September 2011

August 2011

July 2011

June 2011

May 2011

April 2011

March 2011

February 2011

January 2011

December 2010

November 2010

October 2010

September 2010

August 2010

July 2010

June 2010

Links

Billie Lister

Campaign for the Public University

CRIMSOC: the Journal of Social Criminology

Critical Realism

CSISP Online

Cyborgology

Digital Sociology

Everyday Sociology Blog

Films for Action

H-Net

Inequalities

LSE Impact Blog

Migrant Tales

Military Migrants

Public Sociology

Sociological Images

Thinking Culture

This Sociological Life

Tags

academia Academia 2.0

acceleration anti-

marketization asexuality

Audrey Sprenger austerity

big data blogging BSA

capitalism craft critical

realism c wright mills data

science digital

sociology

education employment

ethnography gender

higher

education

identity labour media

neoliberalism

Politics public

engagement public

sociology publishing

quantified self Race

reflexivity self tracking

sexuality social

media social

ontology social

theory sociological

imagination

Sociology sociology

of sport Steve Fuller

technology twitter visual

sociology writing

Categories

Accelerated Academy
(56)

Alternative History of Sociology (6)

C. Wright Mills (52)

Call for Papers (11)

Collections (2)

Committing Sociology
(186)

Conferences (230)

Creepy Shit Tech People Say (1)

Diaspora, Diversity & Difference (51)

Digital Sociology (426)

Fragile Movements (14)

Higher Education (854)

Ill considered university advertising (4)

Interdisciplinarity (7)

Matters Mathematical (11)

Mediated Matters (77)

Outflanking Platitudes (356)

Podcasts (85)

Research Profiles (32)

Rethinking The World (604)

Reviews (92)

Social Media for Academics (79)

Social Theory (49)

Sociological Craft (150)

Sociological Fiction (7)

Sociologists of Crisis (27)

Sociology of Education (17)

The Idle Ethnographer (97)

Training/courses/worksho (3)

Uncategorized (871)

Visual Sociology (114)

Recent Comments

Barbara M Allen on Call for papers: ‘Methods of Theorizing: Reflective searches for Ways, Ideals and Measures’

Public Writing - SCOTT TIMCKE on C. Wright Mills’ Pragmatism

Radicalisation Patterns and Efficacy of Contemporary Counter

Narratives - Criterion Quarterly on A Decade Lost: Rethinking Radicalisation and Extremism

Lavoro del futuro. Oggi una puntata sul gioco di squadra - Luca De Biase on Notes on Platform Capitalism

dmf on Computational social science and the promise of a reflexive, empirically robust activist-sociology

Naveena P K on Between plagiarism and writing a bad book

Naveena P K on Between plagiarism and writing a bad book

Naveena P K on Rethinking Newman's The Idea of a University

Naveena P K on Rethinking Newman's The Idea of a University

Pierluigi Richini on A note on this weekend's post and the future of this blog

Recent Posts

A note on this weekend's post and the future of this blog

The populist right are demotic, rather than democratic

The Surplus of Objects

Engines of Knowledge in the First Information Age: The Library and the Text

Academic Autism: Its Institutional Presence and Treatment

If you see something on the site which you think shouldn't be here, get in touch and we'll try to resolve the situation immediately.

